Volunteers search for old Civil War planes

Volunteers are searching for old Civil War planes in the area of Columbia, Missouri, and are hoping to find some that are still in good condition. The search is being led by a group of volunteers who are working to preserve the history of the Civil War. They are looking for planes that were used by the Union and Confederate forces during the war. The search is being conducted in the area of Columbia, Missouri, and is expected to continue for several weeks. The volunteers are hoping to find planes that are still in good condition and that can be used for educational purposes. They are also hoping to find planes that are still in the hands of private collectors. The search is being conducted in the area of Columbia, Missouri, and is expected to continue for several weeks. # County to pay $250,000 to advertise lack of funds

Lane County will spend up to $250,000 this year publicizing its tight financial picture, in hopes that voters in November will approve higher taxes for public-safety services.

It's an amount for county spending on publicity that has been unparalleled in at least the past 10 years. And it illustrates the seriousness of the effort to persuade voters

Caskets found as workers demolish mausoleum

We had no idea anyone was buried there.

By William R. Weeks
Memphis Daily Journal

There once was a majestic granite mausoleum set on a prominent site in Hudson's Resurrection Cemetery, a recently rekindled hazy piece of dirt remained Friday.

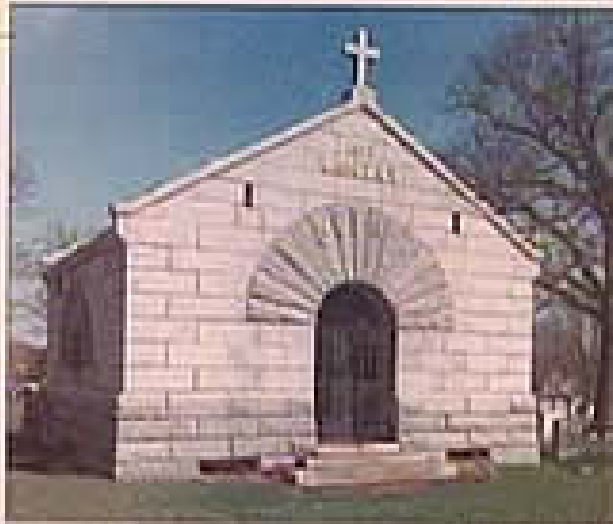

Crane completed the German King of the mausoleum built by 19th century railroad magnate Harvey Lantry and ignored for more than 80 years.

Buried under that low layer of earth are four caskets that probably belong to members of Lantry's family, perhaps to Lantry himself.

Discovery of the caskets this week was just one more chapter of a bizarre story.

"We had no idea anyone was buried there," explained Thomas Hinton, director of cemeteries for the Madison Catholic Diocese.

"We knew there were six crypts in the mausoleum. But we had opened all six and they were empty," he said. "But, when we returned what we thought was the foundation slab for the crypts, we found another six crypts, buried under 2 inches of concrete."

The Lantry mausoleum stands as ruins. It hid a mystery below.

The graves — as one pit layer after in it there — were covered with concrete wall pieces and then covered with earth, Hinton said. Aside from the two stones, the graves were left in place.

The mausoleum was demolished because it had become dangerous, Hinton said.

"It had an interior marble ceiling and marble walls and, because of freezing and thawing, they had fallen on the floor — but there was still debris hanging from the ceiling. The building was falling apart and it was dangerous."

And Lantry, although he obviously was a man of means, left no money for maintenance, he said. Indeed, he left no record that anyone was buried in his mausoleum.

One of Lantry's relatives, Lois Lantry Hedley, said Harvey Lantry was a close relative who was born in New York and later moved to Florida de Ochoa.

He was a prominent capitalist for several years on the Mississippi River but began work in railroad construction in the 1850s.

In 1871 he moved to Kansas, bought a limestone quarry and built about 100 miles of railroad for a railroad, Hedley said. Lantry was the richest man in Kansas at the time of his death.

According to Hedley, "Harvey died at Strong City, Kansas, but he was buried in Madison. After the death of his father, his mother married in Madison along with her children. Because she had such a hard life, Harvey vowed when he was young that he would take possession of his father's."

Now his mausoleum is gone and his grave, for the moment, unmarked. Hinton said he has not decided what to do to mark the grave.

The mausoleum had the name "Lantry" carved over its three arches. Hinton said, he will most likely have that stone slab placed on a concrete base at the site.

Ten Commandments

Supreme Court says some OK, some not

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court gave government officials a mixed message about "Ten Commandments" displays on public property. Some are OK, some are not, by its religious test.

In the first ruling on the church case, the court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments.

Capital is a "neutral" display because it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments.

But in a second ruling, the court said that the display is unconstitutional if it is a "religious" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is unconstitutional if it is a "religious" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is unconstitutional if it is a "religious" display of the Ten Commandments.

The court said the key to whether a display is constitutional is whether it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments. The court said that the display is constitutional if it is a "neutral" display of the Ten Commandments.

I didn't know we could choose.

Utah Poison Control Center reminds everyone not to take poison

"Children Act Fast, So Do Poisons" is the theme for National Poison Prevention Week, arch 20 - 26. The Utah Poison Control Center (UPCC) would like to take the opportunity to remind parents and caregivers that poisonings can be prevented. In 2004, the Utah Poison Control Center responded to over 50,000 calls, the majority of which were about actual potential poisonings.

Over 60 percent of the potential poisoning exposures involved children under age 6. The top five substances that children in this
